SPRING 2019 ADVISING TIP SERIES

Advising Tip of the Week - #1

Gearing Up for Graduation

It's that time again! Fall registration for degree students begins on April 8th (some students with disabilities and veterans will be able to register on the 3rd, while student-athletes are able to register on the 4th).

As you know, students should apply to graduate a year before their expected graduation date. To do that, they must submit an online application through MyRIC. HOWEVER, to save some hassle down the road, before they apply to graduate, encourage them to make sure they have verified their academic plan. In other words, they need to make sure they are listed with the correct program, major(s) and minor(s). Perhaps your advisee never dropped their original major, or added a minor, but chose not to complete it. They must submit a Change of Curriculum form to Records to remove that major or minor; the sooner they do this, the better. Once they check their Academic Advisement Report and see that Records has made the necessary changes, it's time to apply for graduation.

Other things to think about:

- students with nine or fewer credits to complete after the spring can take them in the summer and participate in the commencement ceremony in May. They will be August graduates.
- students receiving more than one degree (e.g. BS, BA, BSW) must apply for each degree separately.

Check your Advisees' Midterm Grades

Midterm grades are due today, and that means you will be able to see how your advisees are doing, perhaps even before advising them! Due to a policy change that took effect in the fall, faculty must post midterm grades for ALL students, not just first-year students, students on academic probation, or students with a C- or less.

To check midterm grades, once you're on your "My Advisees" page in MyRIC, select your student as you would when you want to look at his or her Academic Advisement Report or Unofficial Transcript ("View Student Details"). From the drop-down menu, select "Grades."

You will then be able to see if any instructors have submitted midterm grades for this advisee. If you don't see a "Midterm Grades" tab, that means the student hasn't received any. If the tab is there, click on it to see the student's posted midterm grades.

Telling an Advisee, "You're all Set." What You May Mean vs. What They May Hear

As you review an advisee's transcript, you may tell him/her, "You're all set." You may mean a number of things: the student is doing fine academically, or has chosen the right courses for the upcoming semester, or has finished his/her major requirements.

The student may hear "all set" as "You're ready to graduate in May," and then may be surprised to find out he/she is not graduating (due to outstanding Gen Eds or major requirements, or not having met the minimum 120 credits needed, etc.).

All undergraduate degree students who have reached 90 earned credits are sent an email by Records telling them to apply online for graduation. This triggers an official degree audit which is the official document that confirms degree completion and eligibility for graduation.

So, you might consider replacing "You're all set" with "Looks like you're all set – have you applied online for graduation yet? Your degree audit will confirm your eligibility for graduation."

You might also encourage students to check their own Academic Advisement Reports (AAR) so that they can see their progress for themselves (Please see attachment that you can print and provide to your advisees). In fact, this is something to consider doing the very first time you meet with an advisee; unfortunately, many students don't realize they have access to the AAR (or don't understand how to read it). Doing this will also encourage students to take responsibility for their academic progress. Too many times students blame advisors when they don't graduate on time... students should be reminded that, ultimately, while we are here to help guide them, they are responsible for the choices they make.

Advising Tip of the Week - #4

Saying Goodbye to the Core 3. Do You Have an Advisee Who Needs It?

4-30-19

The very last Core 3 course is being offered this summer, in Session I. Although it is unlikely you will have an advisee who is still on the Old Gen Ed and who needs it, it's not impossible. If you do come across such a student, you or the student should contact Dr. Joan Dagle, Associate Dean, Faculty of Arts and Sciences, who will offer choices for a substitute.
